

Do the math: a 16.9% increase in students and X% less funding.

Community colleges can't deliver for us unless we deliver for them.

In the current economy, enrollments at community colleges have surged an incredible 16.9%. But state funding has declined – as much as X%. That means families seeking an affordable path to college and workers who need new skills to get jobs or retain their current ones may not have a seat in the classroom for the first time since community colleges began. Community colleges are struggling to serve all. Adding late night and early morning classes. Cutting costs and staff. Collaborating with businesses and industry. But without better funding, students, communities and businesses lose. For more than a century community colleges have been the workhorses of higher education. Now they urgently need our help.

Tell your local lawmakers to increase funding for community colleges now.
